Michael Splaine is a consultant/policy adviser to Alzheimer's Disease International (ADI). ADI believes that dementia friendly communities can change the way people think about dementia and improve the quality of life of people living with the disease.

The second edition of ADI's Dementia Friendly Communities: Global developments report (cover shown below) has been expanded to include an overview of new initiatives from low and middle income countries. In total, the report contains valuable information on over 150 projects in 44 countries, which may inspire local communities, planners, and policymakers.

For ADI, the objective of this and future publications is to capture the many ways people have chosen to make their communities dementia friendly and give practical expression to the rights of people with dementia, including access to timely diagnosis, opportunities for post diagnostic support and care, and social engagement in the community.
